Mayor Sebastian N. Giuliano today announced the sites and time for his Budget Round Table Discussions. He said “I want to be sure to give the public every opportunity to voice their input and concerns regarding the City Budget. I also want to share some of the City’s financial data that often gets lost in the midst of political chatter.”

Giuliano, in his second term as Mayor, was the driving force behind this new open budgetary approach. “I think the more input I receive, the better off the overall product will be. I also think it gives the public a chance to tell me what they see as the most important programs, services and overall community assets,” said Giuliano.

The Mayor’s Office released the following locations and times. All are open to the public.
